Star Faran Tahir talks returning to Boston for Shakespeare on the Common's 'Richard III.' 8

5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT JUUL, BOSTON FEATURES EDITOR

Summer may be in full swing, but get ready for "the winter of our discontent" when Shakespeare on the Common returns this week for free performances of "Richard III" this summer. A familiar face is set to play the title character, as actor Faran Tahir has been tapped to play the villainous king. Ahead, Tahir opens up about joining the production, returning to his old stomping grounds in the Hub and more.

DELAYED ARRAIGNMENT FOR ALLEGED COP SHOOTER

1 A Massachusetts man suspected of killing a police officer and a bystander with the officer's pistol was not formally charged Monday because he is still recovering from wounds sustained during a gunfight with police, officials said. Suspect Emanuel Lopes, 20, was arrested Sunday after police in Weymouth received a report of a person driving erratically. When an officer arrived on the scene, the suspect attacked him with a rock, knocking him to the ground before stealing his gun, shooting the officer and then engaging in a gun battle with other police that left a bystander dead. "The Norfolk District Attorney's Office has now been informed that Emanuel Lopes will not be medically available for arraignment today," David Traub, a spokesman for the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office, said in a statement. "We have been told that there is an expectation that he may be fit for arraignment tomorrow." Earlier, officials had said that Lopes could be arraigned on Monday, perhaps in his hospital bed. Officials identified the officer as Michael Chesna, 42. They have not yet publicly identified the other victim, an elderly woman.

WOMAN IN DC ACCUSED OF ACTING AS RUSSIAN AGENT

2 A 29-year-old Russian woman living in Washington has been arrested and charged with conspiracy to act as an agent of the Russian government while developing ties with American citizens and infiltrating political groups, the Justice Department said Monday. Maria Butina, who studied at American University in Washington and is a founder of the pro-gun rights Russian advocacy organization Right to Bear Arms, is accused of working at the direction of a high-level official who worked for the Russian Central Bank and was recently sanctioned by the Treasury's Office of Foreign Assets Control, the Justice Department said in a statement. The court records do not name the official. However, she is pictured in numerous photographs on her Facebook page with Alexander Torshin, the deputy head of Russia's Central Bank, and a person familiar with the matter confirmed to Reuters that she worked for him. Torshin was sanctioned by the Treasury Department in April. Butina was arrested Sunday and was ordered held pending a hearing set for Wednesday, it said.

THE ANNUAL MARKING OF SWANS FOR THE CROWN ESTATE TAKES PLACE ON THE RIVER THAMES

3 A cygnet is weighed during the annual Swan Upping census Monday on the River Thames, South West London. The historic ceremony dates back to the 12th century, when the crown claimed ownership of all mute swans and they were eaten at banquets and feasts. The sovereign's swan marker, David Barber, counts the number of young cygnets on the river each year and ensures that the swan population is maintained. The swans and young cygnets are also assessed for any signs of injury or disease.

REUNITED FAMILIES DEPORTATIONS SUSPENDED

4 A judge temporarily barred the government Monday from the rapid deportation of immigrant parents reunited with their children, while a court considers the impact on children's rights to seek asylum. The government is working to meet a court order to reunite around 2,550 children who were separated by U.S. immigration officials from their parents at the U.S.-Mexican border.The families had been separated as part of a broader crackdown on illegal immigration by the administration of President Donald Trump, sparking an international outcry. The president ordered the practice stopped on June 20. The American Civil Liberties Union said in court papers on Monday that, once reunited, immigrant parents who face deportation should have a week to decide if they want to leave their child in the United States to pursue asylum separately. "A one-week stay is a reasonable and appropriate remedy to ensure that the unimaginable trauma these families have suffered does not turn even worse because parents made an uninformed decision about the fate of their child," the rights group wrote.

EL CHAPO'S TRIAL DELAYED TWO MONTHS

5 A judge Monday postponed the trial of accused Mexican drug lord Joaquin "El Chapo" Guzman by two months, to Nov. 5, after Guzman's lawyer said he needed more time to review evidence recently received from prosecutors. U.S. District Judge Brian Cogan in Brooklyn said the delay was warranted by the "voluminous" evidence that prosecutors handed over on July 3. He denied a request by Guzman's lawyer, Eduardo Balarezo, to bar prosecutors from using evidence that they had not produced by June 26. Jury selection had been scheduled for Sept. 5. In a court filing last week, Balarezo had said prosecutors' late production of evidence "obliterates any semblance of due process and Mr. Guzman's ability to have a fair trial." John Marzulli, a spokesman for U.S. Attorney Richard Donoghue in Brooklyn, declined to comment. Balarezo could not immediately be reached.Guzman, 61, has been in solitary confinement since being extradited to the United States from Mexico in January 2017 to face drug trafficking and conspiracy charges.

Mass. leads nation in reducing number of opioid prescriptions: Report

And that's just one piece of the puzzle in how experts are combatting the opioid crisis in Massachusetts.

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Massachusetts has been one of the hardest-hit areas in the country when it comes to the opioid epidemic. In 2016, the rate of opioid overdose deaths here was 29.7 per 100,000 residents, compared with the national rate of 13.3.

Hopefully, though, there is relief on the way. Doctors in Massachusetts are leading the country in terms of reducing the number of opioid prescriptions, according to a new study from Blue Cross Blue Shield (BCBS).

Between 2013 and 2017, the study found that the number of written opioid prescriptions in Massachusetts went down by 51 percent — the largest drop in the nation.

The report looked at patients receiving opioid prescriptions via BCBS insurance in all 50 states. While not a perfect sample, Duckworth noted, the insurance company covers 100 million people across the country, and 241,900 BCBS members were diagnosed with opioid use disorder in 2017.

Nationally, there was a 29 percent drop in opioid-based medication prescriptions among all BCBS commercially insured members, according to the report.

Massachusetts, however, stuck out the most in terms of improvement: While there were 394 opioid prescriptions written for every 1,000 BCBS members here in 2013, that plummeted to 193 in 2017. The next highest decline was 46 percent for Rhode Island.

In 2016, the rate of opioid overdose deaths here was 29.7 per 100,000 residents, compared with the national rate of 13.3.

The number of opioid prescriptions is plumeting in Massachusetts, according to a Blue Cross Blue Shield report. ISTOCK

"That's a meaningful drop," Duckworth said. "We think it's a real piece of the puzzle. It's not the whole story in the opiate crisis — this is not a solved problem — so this report really summarizes the idea that on the prevention of physician-induced dependents of opiates, Massachusetts is doing a good job."

Reducing opioid prescription rates, as Duckworth noted, is just one piece of the puzzle that is ending the opioid epidemic in Massachusetts, and it's not the only thing being done.

"The other piece we've done as a health plan is liberalized benefits for getting treatment to opioid addiction," Duckworth said. "We removed the copay for methadone, eliminated the copay for Narcan. ... We try to think about how a health plan can be part of the equation, [but] obviously this is a very complex issue."

Duckworth laid out four areas of public health when it comes to fighting the opioid epidemic in Massachusetts: prevention (like reducing opioid prescriptions), intervention (like eliminating the narcan copay), treatment and recovery.

For those last two areas, he pointed to a law enforcement effort: PAARI, or Police Assisted Addiction And Recovery Initiative, which launched in Gloucester alongside the Angel Program in 2015 and was swiftly mimicked by law enforcement agencies around the country.

Through PAARI, anyone who comes to police seeking help for their opioid addiction receives treatment rather than facing arrest.

In June PAARI celebrated its third anniversary, which Executive Director Allie Hunter McDade called in a statement "an inspirational reminder of the critical, lifesaving work that our colleagues in the law enforcement, public health and government sectors are doing each day."

"We're so proud of progress we've made in this fight against addiction," she continued, "but it's important to remember that there's still more work to be done to reverse the trend of overdose deaths that have robbed communities and families of loved ones across America."

Trump slammed after backing Putin

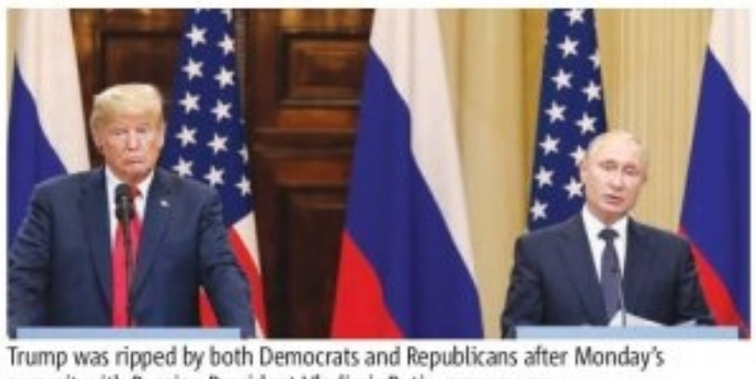
Standing side-by-side with Vladimir Putin, President Donald Trump on Monday refused to blame the Russian leader for meddling in the U.S. 2016 election, casting doubt on the findings of his own intelligence agencies and sparking a storm of criticism at home.

On a day when he faced pressure from critics, allied countries and even his own staff to take a tough line, Trump spoke not a single disparaging word in public about Moscow on any of the issues that have brought relations between the two powers to the lowest ebb since the Cold War.

His performance was denounced as "treasonous" by a former CIA chief and Sen. John McCain called meeting with Putin a "tragic mistake," although some other Republicans were more cautious.

So what was the overall take from Monday's Helsinki summit?



Trump was ripped by both Democrats and Republicans after Monday's summit with Russian President Vladimir Putin. GETTY IMAGES

Trump deflected blame from Russia, throwing the U.S. under the bus

Trump denounced the "stupidity" of the U.S.' policy, especially the decision to investigate election interference following the conclusions drawn by intelligence agencies. A prosecutor announced an indictment three days ago of Russian spies for hacking into Democratic Party networks.

Trump's handling of a joint news conference in Helsinki stirred a wave of condemnation in the U.S., where the White House has struggled for months to dispel a suggestion that Trump was unwilling to stand up to Putin.

Asked if he believed U.S. intelligence agencies, which concluded that Russia interfered in the 2016 election in an effort to help him defeat Democratic candidate Hillary Clinton, he said he was not convinced.

"I don't see any reason why it would be" Russia, Trump said. "President Putin was extremely strong and powerful in his denial today."

Trump appeared to show 'weakness' in not standing up to Putin

At the news conference, Trump was invited by reporters to offer any criticism of Russia but he repeatedly declined. Asked if Russia was at all to blame for the poor ties, he said, "I hold both countries responsible. I think the U.S. has been foolish. We've all been foolish," he said, before veering into discussion about his election victory.

Trump's warm words for Russia were a marked contrast from the past week when he repeatedly rebuked traditional U.S. allies at a summit of NATO and during a visit to Britain.

Sen. Lindsey Graham said Trump's performance would send a message of "weakness" to Moscow.

"Missed opportunity by President Trump to firmly hold Russia accountable for 2016 meddling and deliver a strong warning regarding future elections. This answer by President Trump will be seen by Russia as a sign of weakness and create far more problems than it solves," Graham said on Twitter. REUTERS

Why skipping classes in college is never a good idea

Showing up is everything.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Sure, skipping class was almost a rite of passage during those last days of high school.

Stakes were low: You had probably already been accepted to college, and "senioritis" was contagious.

But now that you are in college, it's time to reset your perspective.

There might be financial consequences of skipping out of a lecture in favor of getting a few extra hours of sleep.

According to a study by Student Loan Hero, students on average pay $594 per college credit.

This figure is an average of $1,039 for a typical four-year private school credit; $135 for a two-year public school credit; $647 for a four-year for-profit school credit; and $325 for the average four-year public school college credit.

Most college courses fulfill three credits. In a 15-week semester, one course at a four-year public school will cost $975 and $3,117 at a four-year private school.

Skipping class at a public university will cost you $32 each time.

That may not seem like that much at the time; the money is not disappearing out of your wallet everytime you duck out of class to go hang out with friends.

But now is when you need to start planning for the future, and chances are you will be paying back that money after you graduate.

And skipping class will work against your keeping your GPA up.

Missing one lecture can sometimes affect how well you grasp the material in a course.

If a certain class is not piquing your interest, drop it before things start to spiral out of control and affect your grades negatively.

So it may have seemed like a thrill in high school, but remember that college is a completely different animal and that skipping class should be a habit you leave in the past.

Shakespeare on the Common returns this week. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Faran Tahir plays the titular villian.

Shakespeare on the Common returns to Boston with 'Richard III'

Star Faran Tahir opens up about returning to the Hub and the joys of public theater.

letters@metro.us

What better way to spend a summer evening than catching a free, open-air Shakespeare play? When Shakespeare on the Common returns to the grassy stage, Faran Tahir will take on the titular role in "Richard III."

A graduate of the American Repertory Theater's Institute for Advanced Theater Training at Harvard University, Tahir sees Boston as his old stomping ground, and he loves being back. He appreciates the democratic, inclusive nature of free public theater in Boston.

"You have the right and the freedom to leave anytime you want, but we are there because we are enjoying this evening together," he tells Metro. "It brings people of all walks of life, all ages, all different backgrounds together. To share that universality is the most amazing gift ever."

Tahir, whose credits include Captain Robau in "Star Trek" (2009) and Raza in "Iron Man" (2008) as well as guest appearances on "Law & Order" and "Grey's Anatomy," insists that audiences will find humanity in his character despite his truly evil behavior. Richard III's nightmares offer a window into his psyche, betraying a guilty conscience. Tahir admits that there is even a point at which Richard III's own evil becomes too much for him to handle.

"The challenge becomes for us as actors and viewers to see [if we] can find the other side of this character so that we can make him more human rather than just a stereotypical, mustache-twirling bad guy," Tahir says.

According to Tahir, the "collective intelligence" of the audience should pick up on parallels between the current political climate and the show. He says the play is meant to hold a mirror up to reality, moving people to stand up to evil acts we see happening in front of us.

"Unless we do something about the actions of others in our lives, if we're not complacent, we can change it," he explains. "It is absolutely my job, as much as your job, as much as the next guy's job, to make sure that we find the beauty on this earth."

Tahir hopes audiences leave the play motivated to fight injustice.

"We can leave with the hope and the promise to ourselves that when we see injustice, or when we see evil, or when we see people being misused and mistreated or disrespected, that we stand up and we do something about that," he says.

Binge this now: Why you should watch FX's 'Snowfall'

With season 2 set to premiere Thursday, now's the time to revisit season 1.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

In the trailer for the second season of FX's crime drama "Snowfall," CIA operative Teddy McDonald (Carter Hudson) tells young drug kingpin Franklin Saint (Damson Idris) that he's "being a little bit paranoid." In response, Saint angrily turns on McDonald. "I'm a black man in America, goddammit! Hell, yeah, I'm paranoid."

The latter's irritable, though poignant statement reflects one of the many harsh realities of "Snowfall" creator John Singleton's sprawling epic. Saint and his associates are just trying to make it in a society that largely wants no part of them, drugs notwithstanding. Yet McDonald, a white man with a cushy government job, is largely unable to understand this. In many ways, this moment serves as a microcosm for the entire series.

What is it about?

With "Snowfall," Singleton, who is best known for his 1991 film "Boyz n the Hood," delves into the stories surrounding the first crack epidemic that plagued Los Angeles in the early '80s. Following the format perfected by "The Wire" and similar shows, it tells several unique narratives that, in direct and indirect ways, connect across disparate lives.

Saint, a small-time marijuana dealer for his uncle, breaks into the city's cocaine game in its infancy and gradually climbs its ladder. McDonald, meanwhile, covers for a deceased colleague and takes over his secret drug operation. Nor are they the only players in the growing game, both in Los Angeles and in the many places that feed it's newfound taste for crack.

There's plenty of time to binge watch "Snowfall" season 1 ahead of the show's return this week.

Why you should binge

Fans of television dramas driven not by singular stories, but vast enterprises like what David Simon accomplished with HBO's "The Wire" during the 2000s, will dig "Snowfall." So too, for that matter, will viewers who appreciate Singleton's ability to craft personal tales about fictional persons whose connections to reality are nonetheless unbreakable. For "Snowfall" is not a "based on a true story" kind of show, but its setting is.

Meet the cast

In addition to Idris and Hudson, whose narratives lead much of "Snowfall," the show also includes a massive cast of characters whose own motivations and experiences matter just as much to the plot. Like Lucia Villanueva (Emily Rios) and Gustavo "El Oso" Zapata (Sergio Peris-Mencheta), a team of newly minted crack suppliers who struggle to free themselves of the cartel's might.

Franklin's mother Cissy (Michael Hyatt) endeavors to provide her son with a better life, while his uncle Jerome (Amin Joseph) supports his nephew's expanding drug empire, despite the costs he never anticipated or wanted. The main cast is rounded out by Franklin's Aunt Louie (Angela Lewis) who, like Jerome, does everything she can to enable his business. Fellow drug dealer Avi Drexler (Alon Moni Aboutboul), however, proves to be as much of a help as a hindrance.

How to binge "Snowfall"

Those looking to catch up on "Snowfall" season 1 ahead of the second season premiere can do so via the FXNOW app or on demand.

"Snowfall" season 2 premieres Thursday, July 19, at 10 p.m. on FX.

Keep your training in Crews control this summer

Stay fit all season long with these tips from "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" star Terry Crews.

jeff.tomko@metro.us

Hollywood heavyweight Terry Crews has a formula for staying as shredded today as the star of "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" and Panera Bread pitchman as he looked more than a decade ago. Consistency in the weight room — plus a dash of cheat in the kitchen — is how the 49-year-old's physique looks ripped year-round and what can help you stay ready for the summer.

We're not all like Crews with the willpower and dedication for a consistently fit physique 12 months a year. But now with summer here to endanger our waistlines, we can use these four tips from Crews to keep us in shape throughout the summer.

1 Try meal prepping

"If you don't plan, you'll go off the deep end," Crews says. Instead, he suggests a food plan of attack for the week. A seven-day menu is good planning for those days you're too occupied with summer fun to worry about cooking. "Make one day a meal-prep day," Crews says. "Have your food prepared beforehand for the week so that coming back from a binge won't be as hard."

2 Get your workout in early

Odds are a day in the sun is going to zap motivation for an afternoon gym session. While most of us are still in bed at 5 a.m., Crews is hitting the gym hard. "For me it's morning, morning, morning," Crews says. "It's the hardest thing you'll do, but you've got it done. Then you're fine the rest of the day."

Crews recently made a stop at Delaware's Firefly Festival, handing out samples of Panera's Bacon Mac & Cheese (available till today) to festivalgoers.
MARK STEHLE/AP IMAGES FOR PANERA BREAD

3 Get out and run

There's gonna be that day when you overeat. It's inevitable. When it happens, hit the treadmill or go for a jog to burn off yesterday's overindulgence. "I encourage people to run," says Crews. "Get outside and run it off because a good cardio session will get that congestion out of you."

4 HIIT it hard

High-intensity interval training is quick, intense,and will burn calories. "Turn your workout up to a real high volume, get your heart rate up, then slow it down. That'll settle your body out," Crews says. For good measure, you can try one of Crews' workouts — what he calls "24s." This workout consists of an upright row, power clean, Romanian deadlift and jump squats of six reps each (total of 24), for anywhere from two to four sets. "You'll be good after that," Crews promises. "Then go get a Panera bacon mac and cheese and do it all over again."

Crews' weekly workout schedule

Monday: Legs
Tuesday: Back
Wednesday: Abs
Thursday: Chest, arms
Friday: Shoulders, plyometrics
Crews also runs 4 miles a day, seven days a week.*

GRONK WATCH

Timing is everything in life and in the NFL, and the Patriots are typically on point when it comes to making key transactions at the perfect moment. If the Patriots are to trade Rob Gronkowski, which has been rumored this entire offseason, expect it to happen between the start of training camp and the final roster cut-down day in early September.

The Patriots have partaken in September surprises in the past, most notably way back in 2003 when they cut Lawyer Milloy. While the early returns on that move hurt the team as the Pats lost in Week 1 to the Buffalo Bills, it ultimately made the team tougher mentally and they went on to win their second Super Bowl that season.

Patriots head coach Bill Belichick, much to the chagrin of Mr. Positive Tom Brady, is not going to change his coaching style. As former Belichick assistant Rick Venturi pointed out in a 2016 oral history of Belichick's coaching style: "If he has a motivational style, I'd say that it's constant emotional discomfort. That's why his teams never flat-line."

The Patriots will be attempting to reach the Super Bowl for the third straight season this year, something they have not yet accomplished in the Belichick era. Surely, Belichick will want a fresh look for the 2018 team. That is the major reason that Belichick may still be exploring a Gronkowski trade. It would shock his team, and would surely get them on track with his my-way or the highway approach.

We have seen other successful NFL teams "tune out" their head coach in recent years, as many of the veteran players on the Seattle Seahawks complained about Pete Carroll fatigue. No doubt, Brady and Gronkowski are suffering from it right now. It's doubtful that "Do your job" is going to motivate them much at this stage of their careers.

"As training camp approaches the Patriots and tight end Rob Gronkowski still don't have an adjustment to a contract that pays him only $8 million for 2018," Pro Football Talk's Mike Florio said. "The real question is, are the Patriots actively thinking about shopping him? Would they be making a phone call? Are they considering – if they don't get a deal done – trying to move Rob Gronkowski early in training camp to another team. They were making calls about Gronk as recently as three days before the draft. It was two days before the draft that Gronkowski finally committed to playing in 2018. Until that contract restructuring is finalized, until we know that the Patriots have given Gronkowski a financial package that he's happy with for 2018 – anything could happen."

PUTIN AND MCGREGOR

Conor McGregor has become quite the fame-whore, afraid to NOT be in the spotlight. In the past few days alone the former UFC Light Heavyweight champion announced his girlfriend Dee Devlin was pregnant with the couple's second child, he showed up in a press box at the World Cup Final, and he posed in a controversial Instagram photo with Russian President Vladimir Putin. McGregor went so far as to call Putin, who has been accused of war crimes among many other horrible things, "one of the greatest leaders of our time."

"Today I was invited to the World Cup final as a guest of Russian President Vladimir Putin," McGregor wrote. "This man is one of the greatest leaders of our time and I was honored to attend such a landmark event alongside him. Today was an honor for me Mr. Putin. Thank you and congratulations on an amazing World Cup."

Jeez. This guy makes Trump look critical of Putin by comparison.

Interestingly enough, McGregor has been something of a Trump supporter over the past few years – ripping into the "mindset" of anti-Trump protestors.

NO QUIT IN NBA TRADE RUMORS

OPINION

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is the Executive Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US. Follow him on Twitter @burke_metro

The tide is beginning to turn when it comes to leverage in Kawhi Leonard trade talks as it has become clear that San Antonio isn't going to get fair value for their disgruntled star. The Lakers are perfectly content in waiting until next summer to land Kawhi in free agency as opposed to a trade now where they would have to give up a young talent like Brandon Ingram. The Celtics and Sixers are hesitant to give up any of their assets as well considering it seems certain that Kawhi will bolt for Los Angeles next summer anyway.

The Spurs are now up against it, as they risk watching Leonard walk away next summer and getting nothing in return. The trade market is sure to shrink once the season starts and we get closer to the trade deadline. Historically speaking, teams giving up a superstar-level talent get more in return during the summer months than in January or February. This is mostly because during the summer months there are many more teams with lofty aspirations for the following season. In the thick of the NBA season, most teams are hit with the cold reality that they are not near true contention - lessening the likelihood they would give up the farm.

Given that the Warriors are so far ahead of everyone else in the NBA, this will make it even harder for the Spurs to find a suitable trade partner. For most every team in the league, simply adding Kawhi would not be enough to seriously compete with Golden State.

Last week Ric Bucher of Bleacher Report wrote than "nearly a half dozen GMs" told him that they would trade for Kawhi even without a guarantee that he'd stay beyond next season. One particular Eastern Conference GM, who sounds a lot like Celtics boss Danny Ainge in this quote, told Bucher he would be willing to make a deal despite no extension.

"I wouldn't say we're all scared to death to make a deal because there's no chance [Kawhi] will re-sign [with a team somewhere other than with the Lakers]," the anonymous East GM said. "PG did. C-Webb did."

The Celtics and Ainge have talked the talk about this subject in the past, but have never really walked the walk. In 2014, Ainge consistently made it clear during radio appearances that he'd be willing to trade for then-Timberwolves star Kevin Love despite Love set to become a free agent the following summer.

Love to love to love ya

Speaking of Love, it's no secret around the NBA that Ainge believes Kevin Love can be an elite player if put in the right circumstance. With LeBron James now out of the picture in Cleveland, there is plenty of reason to believe that the Celtics will once again kick the tires on a Love trade.

If Cavaliers GM Koby Altman is willing to deal Love, however, don't expect to see it happen until around next February's trade deadline at the earliest. Altman is saying, at least publicly, that the Cavaliers want to "compete" in 2018-19 rather than "tank."

"To go the complete opposite direction, which we've been through, is not fun and it's hard," Altman told Cleveland.com. "It's hard to sort of come out of that. And the unknown is really daunting to me. I really like what we have now and I don't necessarily want to go backwards."

Given today's NBA landscape, there's reason to believe Altman here. In the watered down East, the Cavs can certainly make the playoffs with their current roster.

That said, overall mediocrity will get tired in a hurry in Cleveland - where they have become accustomed to making NBA Finals runs. The Cavs are expected to have some of the poorest attendance in the league at their home games this season.

Love will almost certainly be dealt before he becomes a free agent in 2020 as it will make little sense for the Cavs to build around a 31-year-old Love at that time. And of course, the Celtics will be one of the top rumored destinations for the sharp-shooting forward - as his offensively ability would surely be lethal in a Brad Stevens system.

At this point in their roster building, however, the Celtics are only locked in on big fish (i.e. Anthony Davis) in regards to giving up any of their key assets (Jaylen Brown, Memphis pick, Kings pick). Love, at this stage, is more of a guppy than a shark - so the Celtics would only be interested in a bargain. Ainge is notorious for targeting desperate situations, and the Cavaliers just aren't there … yet.

Also important to remembers is the history between the Celtics and Cavaliers on the trade front. The Kyrie Irving trade got pretty messy at the end there last summer when Altman was requesting Ainge to throw in extra draft picks because of worry about Isaiah Thomas' injury.
